büro blickpunkt positions itself along the boundary line separating architecture from art. In fact, their works aim to dissolve this border entirely. Eva Tuerks and Juliane Wolf, the team's protagonists, produce buildings, interiors, urban interventions, and objects with the intention of generating unexpected points of view, of perceiving the surrounding environment anew, of seeing differently, of adopting a wider perspective. Now, in the context of the exhibition series An intimac(it)y, büro blickpunkt is producing a project for and in collaboration with the A trans Pavilion.

The space of the pavilion will remain virtually unaltered – only the exterior shell will be supplemented via the application of paint and concrete. This intervention will transform the building's character, shifting the potential of the materials into the field of focus. The application of paint to the pavilion's glass façade, for example, will generate natural fractals, eliciting a multiplicity of associations. These interventions will evolve in conjunction with daily rhythms, developing their effects on location. Simple transformations will allow the character and visual properties of the existing building and its surroundings to take on unexpected appearances. This scenarization of an interface between interior and exterior space is designed to offer visitors multiple points of access to their own inner landscapes.

The opening reception will take place on Saturday, 10 May 2008 at 4 pm. You and your friends are cordially invited.

A trans Pavilion is participating in DMY Berlin 2008 Design Festival from May 21 – 25, 2008.
